One Minute Madness

Three Letter Body Parts

Estimated play time: Less than 10 minutes

Number of players: Unlimited

Supplies Needed: A stopwatch or some kind of one-minute timer; players need pencils and paper.

Overview: One question. One minute. Multiple answers. In One Minute Madness, a question is asked that has multiple answers (usually anywhere from 5 to 100+). The goal is to see how many correct answers your players can write down in one minute.

Instructions:

1. Divide the players into teams.
2. One person on each team should be the designated writer. All members of the team will feed answers to the writer, who can also supply answers. Since this game is being timed, the writer should be encouraged to abbreviate. For example, it takes less time to write 'LA' than 'Los Angeles.' However, the writer should be sure that s/he can read back the abbreviated answers after the minute is up.
3. Read the question twice, then start the one-minute timer. Let the players know when they have 30 seconds left, then 15 seconds left. The teams should write down as many answers as possible. In most cases, it's unlikely they'll get all the answers. The winning team will get the most correct answers.
4. When the minute is up, tell the teams to stop writing. The first team writer reads his/her team's answers aloud one at a time. The host checks each answer against the answer list in this document to be sure that it is correct. If it's correct, all teams that had that answer should circle it. After the first team's answers are given, the second team reads the answers they have that are not circled (i.e., answers they wrote down that the first team did not have.) This continues until all teams have read all their answers.
5. The teams score their own lists, one point for every circled answer (i.e., every correct answer). The team with the most correct answers wins the game.
